Attachment A

Cooperative Extension Program Provided by the University

Using County input as further described in Attachment D, Advisory Council, an annual Plan of Work will be issued with detailed and specific descriptions of UCCE programs for the Counties in the coming program year. These programs will serve the citizens of the Counties by providing science based research, education and public service that will promote applied research and local problem solving in agriculture, natural resources (including environmental quality), food and nutrition, food safety and youth development.

In the course of their work, UCCE staff will deliver a range of locally-relevant programs focusing on agriculture, natural resources, nutrition, youth development, science literacy, home horticulture and gardening. Staff will use workshops, public meetings, newsletters, mass media and other communication tools to bring needed information to the Counties. Further, staff will use collaborative partnerships with government and private agencies to extend the reach of their programs. Finally, staff may collaborate with campus-based Cooperative Extension program Specialists and Agricultural Experiment Station scientists to research, adapt and field-test agricultural improvements or solutions and promote the use of research findings in the Counties.

Subject to availability of required resources, UCCE would implement programs with the following areas of emphasis.

Agriculture and Natural Resources: Research and education programs that meet local agriculture and natural resource needs, focused on enhancing the agricultural productivity and competitiveness of the Counties and protecting water, land and air resources. Together with farmers, pest control Advisers and industry representatives; current and emerging agricultural opportunities and problems would be identified.

Nutrition, Family and Consumer Sciences: Offering opportunities for families, individuals, and youth to enhance their quality of living by providing resources that support independence and self-sufficiency, health maintenance and obesity/diabetes prevention. These Advisors also provide information on food safety, food preparation, food preservation and budgeting for food security.

Master Gardeners: University-trained volunteers providing advice and support for local home owners and gardeners. Through volunteers, staff overseeing the UCCE Master Gardener Program will extend research-based information about home horticulture and pest management to the citizens of the Counties.

4-H Program: Encompassing a wide variety of educational and enrichment experiences to help young people discover and develop their potential. 4-H Youth Development Program staff provide meaningful, learn-by-doing educational activities to children in 4-H clubs and/or to children participating in school enrichment and after-school programs. Citizenship and science literacy including biology, math and engineering are thrusts of the program.

The Counties share common area-wide problems and issues, yet have different needs and priorities as well. The University will service and will allocate the resources of the UC Cooperative Extension County Partnership in a manner roughly proportionate to the level of support provided by each member County. While the University will endeavor to respond to the highest needs of every member County, it is understood not all needs can be met given the limitation on available resources.
